Vocational Vision (link)

Social Justice and Cultural Studies specializes in vocational vision

- With the intersecting nature of careers and development, our extraordinary faculty (link cultural studies faculty) and courses (link to catalogue) represent a wide range of fields.
- Given these urban and global intersections, the critical practice of Cultural Studies draws on methods, theories, and practices from history, geography, cultural anthropology, literary, film, communication studies, economics, sociology, psychology, and political science.
- Our core courses in cultural studies, systems and histories, alongside practical tracks for vocational skills, experiential internships or study abroad prepare you for your vocation.
- These core courses focus on historically under-represented groups, preparing students for our culturally diverse world, and enacting a theology of social justice.
- Our unique Capstone in Race, Representation, and Law offers a systematic look at cultural studies and legislative developments. Plus, Capstone’s final paper asks students to reflect on their vocational vision in light of their skills training in the tracks.

Pre-Requisites:* Prior to Capstone, SJC majors need to meet with their SJC advisors to show that they have completed at least three of the following: internship preparation course, internship, interview potential employer, job search, resume building workshop, SJC Career Panel, Interview workshop, or mentoring.
